Georgia schools' performance

Published on: 7/11/06

BusinessOpinionHealth

Under the federal No Child Left Behind, schools are required to meet annual testing goals and demonstrate yearly progress measured by subgroups, including low-income, minority and special education students. Here's how Georgia schools stacked up on what is called Adequate Yearly Progress, the state's measure of year-to-year student achievement.

Schools that have failed to make satisfactory progress for two consecutive years or longer are placed on the state's "Needs Improvement" list. Schools on this list face an increasingly steep set of sanctions. A school on the list for the first time must allow students to transfer to other schools. After four years on the list, a school may be required to completely reinvent itself. Parents should understand why their child's school is on the "needs improvement" list before determining whether to transfer the child to another school.

Records: 1-131 of 131

AYP Status: School either “met” or “did not meet” federally mandated standards this year

Years (in Needs Improvement): Indicates the number of years in Needs Improvement status. A Needs Improvement school is one that has been identified as needing to improve in specific areas. Schools that do not make AYP for two or more consecutive years in the same subject at both grade spans are in need of improvement or are simply under-performing.

Choice: Indicates whether the school must allow its students to transfer to schools not on the needs improvement list

Tutoring: Indicates the school must offer free tutoring to its students

* The DeKalb County school district received permission from the U.S Department of Education to have some schools offer free tutoring instead of transfers for the 2006-2007 school year because of crowding at schools eligible to receive transfers. Those schools are denoted with the word "waiver" next to their school name.
